TOP SECRET CHESS

SHIPYARD AND NAVAL BASE
TING-HAI, CHINA

25X1D Ting-Hai Shipyard, a minor shipyard formerly engaged primarily in the repair of small naval craft, has undergone considerable expansion and modernization since the previous photo cover of [REDACTED]. This yard now has five shipbuilding ways, each 260 feet long, from which ships are moved on transverse rails to an adjacent end-launching way.

25X1D Ting-Hai Naval Base, located 1.5 miles east of the shipyard, occupies the site of the inactive seaplane station as well as portions of the abandoned airfield. This naval base now appears to serve primarily as a supply depot. Construction since [REDACTED] includes two offshore wharves, 300 feet and 210 feet long, and several warehouses.

25X1D About 1.5 miles west of the shipyard, three large new offshore wharves, each from 240 to 350 feet long, have been built along a strip of coast where the 5-fathom line lies relatively close to the shore. An improved road, under construction in [REDACTED] connects these wharves with the shipyard and naval base.

25X1D Shipping in the vicinity of Ting-Hai on [REDACTED] included the following vessels.

25X1D One LST (US LST-1 class), [REDACTED] 7 PT; 2 Japanese Kaibokan 25X1D
25X1D #2 Class, [REDACTED]; one Japanese Hashidate Class [REDACTED]; one
25X1D Japanese Ukuru Class, [REDACTED]; one British Castle Class, [REDACTED] 25X1D
25X1D one British Flower Class, 205 feet long; and one British Bathurst Class, 25X1D [REDACTED] 3 MSF (USSR T-43 Class), [REDACTED]; one ATA (US Army 25X1D 143 or 149 class), [REDACTED]; one AOG (tanker), 145 feet long;
one possible dry cargo ship, 170 feet long; 2 scows, each 135 feet long;
and approximately 30 small craft.

The major identifiable components of the shipyard and naval base are shown on the accompanying line drawings and described in the keys to annotations.
